Electioneering Is Normal

There have been times recently when Draft Director Lewis B. Hershey has sounded like an aging man too old to worry about his public image and saying what is on his mind.

When he commented a few days ago that congressional electioneering is behind some of the rumbling against Selective Service he clearly was saying what was on his mind. And when he aded that electioneering is "normal," he was saying what is on everybody's mind.

Selective service is a lively topic because the undeclared war in Viet Nam causing draft quotas to rise is a lively issue. It is destined to be lively political issue, starting in this year's congressional elections and gaining liveliness until the national election in 1968.

No one doubts the war will still be going on in 1968. Nor can anyone doubt that as the 1968 election draws nearer it will be increasingly important to the People's Republic of China and the Union of Socialist Soviet Republics to keep it going. They are not unaware of the internal politics of the United States.

In the tense struggle for international power and status the United States has become involved in a showdown it cannot afford to lose and may not be able to win. The uncertain element is the state of public opinion in the United States. Dissatisfaction with the draft is a symptom of this uncertainty.

If this were a popular war, solidly backed by the people of the United States, the inequities of the draft would be borne stoically. But this is not a popular war. The drafts inequities are being discussed by politicians, among others, because it is the business of politicians to reflect their constituents.

This is normal, as Gen. Hershey says it is. The undeclared war in Viet Nam is a political issue. It is being discussed. If two years from now it still is going from bad to worse, it could well be the turning point of the next national election.

That, too, would be electioneering-perfectly normal electioneering.

Khrushchev's Disappearing Act

Nina Khrushchev, in a chance encounter with British newsmen at Moscow's Sheremetyevo Airport, said her once world-famous husband has recovered from a long siege of kidney trouble and is living quietly in the villa outside

Moscow provided for him by the government. Much as it hurts to say the Russians have thought of something before the United States can claim the credit, the disappearing act they used to get Nikita Khrushchev off the political stage is impressive.

In its ways it is more impressive than the 22nd amendment to the Constitution of the United States, limiting presidents to two consecutive terms.

The 22nd amendment only keeps an individual from monopolizing an office. The Russian Invention keeps a former president from making himself into an elder statesmen whose views and opinions are given importance out of proportion to his importance.

This can be troublesome in a society that makes a special point of forcing everybody but aging politicians into retirement before they have worn out their welcome. There finally does come a time in the lives of even the most prominent personages when their views no longer have significance.

It happened to Herbert Hoover. It happened to Harry Truman. It happened to Dwight D. Eisenhower, who also tempted to talk about something he did not understand clearly.

Nikita Khrushchev would still be talking if anyone were listening. But his audience vanished, along with his office. It's possible the Russians may have made the most useful discovery for the New World since Russian dressing: A political disappearing act that really will be recorded and reflected to a report to be submitted to Johnson within a few weeks.

The chairman of the planning council - Ben W. Heineman Jr., a railroad executive - sees the conference as a jumping - off point for a full - scale involvement by society at every level, by private citizens as well as government officials. He denied the goals are "pie in the sky" although acknowledging that all the measures recommended might cost billions of dollars.

In the years ahead as Johnson tries to translate into action the ideas from the council and the conference he can claim, especially to a Congress where he is bound to encounter some opposition, that the ideas didn't just spring from his administration. It will be a big help to the world to be, next to a safety-oriented factory would be in an automobile cruising on a modern highway.

This will hold true - since the council itself already has made recommendations - even if the conference should be badly distracted or damaged by some militant civil rights groups which, for one reason or another, are antagonistic to the conference.

Tuesday the Congress of Racial Equality complained the conference is "rigged," but that it would take part to try to change the rules so that "the militant can bring forth ideas which otherwise would not be brought forth.

It is 11 o'clock. Memorial Day is almost over. The kids, dogs, tired parents, boat trailers, campers, station wagons, sedans and the other paraphernalia of an American holiday are home. The miracle has happened again.

Tomorrow, people who talk about the holiday highway death toll for a living will rant and rave, implore and deplore, view with alarm and point with sorrow

It is too bad accidents happen. But surely the most remarkable thing about the era of the automobile is that so few accidents bappen, when it is considered that automobiles are in the hands of almost everybody who wants one and that all but a few of the hands have proved capable.

With due respect to people who talk about the holiday highway toll for a living, there is another side to the story that deserves to be mentioned once in a while-the millions of people who drive billions of miles and never cause or witness an accident.

Labor Solidly Backs Draft

The battleground of the republic in these days of the citizen-soldier appears to be the draft. There are the card burners, the hunger strikers, the sit-inners. Yet if all these were marshalled in one vast hall, they would not equal, by far, the number of young men who enlist voluntarily in one month.

There are the solid backers of the draft, such as the leaders of Labor. None is more sturdy and steadfast. But they are beginning to eye jaundicedly the huge bulk of college deferments and have queried La- Victor Riesel bor Secretary Wirtz on the problem. This, say some labor leaders of considerable influence and import, discriminates against the young men who work with their hands as well as brains-or are learning to become adept at physical skills needed to make a space age

While college men are deferred and deferred, youngsters in the skilled trades' apprentice training programs are being drafted.

NATIONAL LABOR LEADERS, using the jargon of their trade, say bluntly, this is "unfair." They plan to take another look at the nation's draft policy which has been reaching into apprenticeship training programs such as those run by the electrical, plumbing and other construction industries.

In the printing trades' programs, a young man is "safe" if he has completed one year of apprentice training. But if a prospect is drafted before he gets into such craft schools, how can he get his one year in, asks one union official. On the other hand, a young man applying for college gets in if he has the grades and then generally is secure for four years. "This apprenticeship training is just as much an education for future life for these kids." said one national official, "as any college education is for the others. Furthermore, the trades they learn in the apprenticeship program are really vital to America's defense effort.'

THERE IS POWERFUL labor support for the citizen-soldier Reserve and National Guard training. This is reflected in an exchange of letters, never published between Secretary of Defense McNamara and AFL-CIO President Meany

It began last November when Mr. McNamara wrote to Mr. Meany saying that "urgent national defense requirements today call for the stepped-up training of our citizen-soldier components to achieve an advanced stage of combat readiness.

"A selected force of National Guard and Reserve units has been designated for this mission. Starting this month, training for the 119,-000 Army Guardsmen and 31,000 Army Reservists . . . will be increased 50 per cent to the equivalent of three eight-hour days per month-to be accomplished on weekends or at night.

"Similar stepped-up training has been effected for 12,000 members of the Air National Guard and 10,000 members of the Air Force Reserve. "The citizen-soldier in these and all other reserve training units will need the understanding and support of his employer if he is to perform effectively both his military duties and the civilian job which is his means of livelihood. We must make sure that neither his earning power nor his advancement possibilities will be jeopardized by his military service."

SECRETARY McNAMARA then asked Mr. Meany "to alert leaders of unions affiliated with the AFL-CIO to this problem. Specifically, we ask for the understanding and assistance of the local leadership of the affiliates in our efforts to insure that equitable arrangements are made, as necessary for reservists to fulfill their military obligations. McNamara added that some work schedules would have to be rearranged to meet production deadlines and military training requirements. Then he urged that plant supervisors, union representatives and guard and Reserve unit commanders work together in each locality.

After Mr. Meany returned from the national AFL-CIO convention, he replied to the defense secretary with pledges of full support. He assured the Defense Department that the AFL-CIO would "cooperate in every way . . . to free members of National Guard and Reserve units for extra days of training." Mr. Meany then communicated with all national union presidents. They in turn alerted their local leaders. He also designated the erudite AFL-CIO research director, Nat Goldinfer, to work with the Department of Defense "to assist in implementing this effort.' At this moment all is going smoothly, and

Mr. Meany has made good his pledge, in the name of the 13 million members of America's big labor federation, that there would be "complete AFL-CIO cooperation in this matter."

No doubt this stance has provoked criticism of the labor leaders by virtually all of those to whom President Johnson has appealed to

Political Reform

By David Lawrence

Campaign Fund Curbs Eyed

President Johnson has sent a communication to Congress urging that the statutes dealing with the financing of political campaigns be strengthened. He said the existing laws are "obsolete, too narrow and inadequate" and "invite evasion and circumvention." He declared they must be revised.

The President's message is constructive so far as it goes, especially in recommending that there be "complete public disclosure of campaign funds" by all candidates as well as revelations also by members of Congress of gifts and income, David Lawrence but the central difficulty is ignored.

Huge organizations collect money under varlous kinds of duress and use the funds, in effect, as a means of buying elections. They exert pressure on members of Congress as well as officials of state and city governments to get favorable action on measures in which these organizations usually have a financial interest. If ever there was a "conflict of interest," it is in this anomaly At present, a national political committe singly cannot raise or spend more than $3 million in any year but there is no limit of the number of committees that can be created and, as the President says, the federal restriction does not apply at all to committees active in only one state

Significantly, Mr. Johnson points out that the present law does not limit spending by state committees which incidentally aid federal candidates.

THIS HELP IS GIVEN when campaign speeches are made for the party as a whole. Candidates for federal offices and local nominees benefit from the same effort and from the boosts that are given at mass meetings to urge the citizen to vote a straight-party ticket.

Then there are the primary contests which have never been covered by federal laws. Yet in many states a nomination won in a primary is equivalent to victory in the final election.

Complete disclosure, however, of who furnishes the money and in what amount will not alone uproot the evils in the present methods of conducting political campaigns. There will be no real clean-up of the campaign scandals in the United States and no assurance that elections are not being bought until a limit is placed on the amount of money that any organization which is interested in legislation pending in Congress can raise and contribute to political

For many years, there have been limits on the size of individual contributions, but there is no ceiling on what a labor organization, for Instance, can raise. Both corporations and labor unions have been forbidden to contribute to political campaigns of candidates for federal office, but they manage just the same, directly or indirectly, to make contributions to state political funds and campaign activities from which nominees for federal office derive considerable benefit.

THE NET RESULT is that the labor organizations, for example, openly boast each year of the number of members of Congress which they claim to have in their corner. They actually their supporters.

Some disclosures are made under present laws as to the amounts of money contributed, but no congressional committee has ever delved penetratingly into the way by which campaign funds are raised or how the money is used to benefit particular candidates for public office. If this were undertaken, it would be found that many a member of Congress is beholden to organizations which have raised enough money to put him in office and to keep him there. provided he supports the legislation in which they have a vested interest.

This is just another form of buying elections. but public opinion never seems to have been aroused on the subject, though individual incidents here and there have at times been exposed.

Maybe the President's new communication to Congress will at least focus attention on the political corruption that exists in America due to the misuse of campaign contributions.

THERE'S ANOTHER PROBLEM. No matter how carefully the laws are written, enforcement by one political party or the other when in power seems casual. The Federal Corrupt Practices Act, for instance, today prohibits labor unions and corporations alike from contributing not only money but "anything of value" to the campaigns of nominees for federal office. The statute has never been strictly enforced, and there are no "demonstrations" on the streets or organizations actively advocating reforms which have enough influence to pressure the government into strict enforcement of this law forbidding corrupt practices.

Junior Editors Quiz on-ROCKS

QUESTION: Can rocks breathe? * * *

ANSWER: This question may not seem to make sense. We all know that breathing is what living things do in order to bring lifegiving oxygen into their bodies. But rocks are dead, non-living materials. Obviously they can't breathe, since to breathe implies having life. Our questioner, however, probably asked this question because she knew a remarkable fact about rocks-that even though they look so solid and are not alive, they have a great deal of oxygen gas in their composition.

The diagram at upper left shows that the element oxygen makes up about two - thirds of the material in a human being. With every heart beat, we are sending fresh supplies of vital oxygen throughout our bodies. But it is surprising to learn that the solid rock ball of the earth is composed of about 50 per cent of this oxygen gas which floats around so freely in the air. Smaller amounts of oxygen and water constantly work their way into rock from the outside, too. They combine in a chemical reaction which tends to break down the rock and is one of the ways in which soil is formed. * * *

FOR YOU TO DO: Become a "rock hound" and learn more about this fascinating subject. You will need the materials Jack has in the picture: a rock hammer, cold chisel, note book, magnifying glass. Also, some kind of book about minerals or geology. Then go out and keep your eyes open for interesting rocks. You'll find them almost everywhere.

* * * Kathleen Templeton, of St. Ann's School, Hamilton, Ontario, wins this week's grand prize of a 15-volume set of Compton's Pictured Encyclopedia for this question. Mail yours on a postcard to Junior Editors in care of The Review.
